Summary of Questions & Answers

Are correctional centers exempt from the reschedule and cancellation policy?

The test administrator or proctor will schedule the tests for those in corrections. The usual practice is to schedule the day before the test, although, if there is concern that someone may leave before the test and test fees lost, the tests can be scheduled the same day the tests are administered. The test administrator or proctor will have to run an “end of day” protocol in order to schedule the day of the test.

Besides checks and cards, can organizations set up accounts and be billed?

Pearson allows certain eligible organizations to apply for a line of credit and then be billed for scheduled tests. I believe this option is for those purchasing large numbers of vouchers on a reoccurring basis, such as a state agency. Pearson has an application form for this.
